Satellite communication systems have revolutionized the information age by allowing for the transmission of information over long distances at low cost and with minimal infrastructure. Satellite communications systems generally comprise a network of earth orbit satellites that transmit and receive signals to and from user terminals on the surface of the earth. A satellite communication system typically includes a constellation of satellites that are organized into orbital planes with the earth below each orbital plane. A user terminal may be a stationary satellite receiver. A user terminal that moves relative to a stationary satellite receiver may be referred to as a mobile user terminal. One example of a mobile user terminal is a mobile telephone or cellular telephone. Mobile user terminals often operate in an outdoor environment in which user terminals are exposed to the environment.
